

THE NEW YORK TIMES

What could possibly be better than finding the designer dress of your dreams at a fraction of its original cost, and knowing that every single dollar goes to New York City's neediest children? The Bridal Garden, the nonprofit bridal boutique for Sheltering Arms Childrens Service, is at a new roomier site, a 1,400 square-foot loft at 54 West 21st Street, Suite 907. On its racks are more than 200 gowns (mostly samples) donated by Badgley Mishka, Manale, Ulla-Maija, Vera Wang, Peter Langner, Anne Barge and more. Two couture-trained designers are on hand to personally fit each bride. "The gowns are so beautifully made that you need someone who knows about draping and construction to do the alterations," says Geraldine Brower, Boutique Manager and Director of Development. Brides who donate their gowns receive a tax deduction as well as the pleasure of helping a child.
